Satellite radio gives me a chance to listen to music, news and sports the way I want to listen to it: continuous and without interruption like the normal junk in my valley. To have its service stifled is just another example of how the big, fat, ugly corporate monsters like cable tv want their customers to have no options or freedom to choose their best option. Instead of trying to silence satellite radio, why not become more competitive and better instead? That used to be the true American way of free enterprise. Now its pork barrel politics and back alley bullying antics.
